Smile When You Are Particularly Low

Doc Mertz traveled three years with his
The Uncomplaining Woman.

Frequently challenged in the South and West by Townie Wags goading her into losing her temper. Not!

She always stayed sweet and, of course, uncomplaining.

Act losing steam, though. Why Doc accepted Big Apple booking.

“If they can’t kill it there, we’ll kill them everywhere else!”
But a Feminist Triumvirate out for blood that first night,
Doc cut short the presentation, inviting them for dinner.

Between their injecting him with vicious points, and his slippery, dancing responses, they all got drunk.

Doc had the last word. “Look! I agree with most you said about doormats and all that, but it’s Show Business!

Complaining Woman would sell squat tickets!"
